

Many Homes, One World

(Tim Hansen 2/23/07)

Some people live in little grass houses
Some people call the barrio home
Some people choose to live in one place
While there are still others who would rather roam
Some people live a jet set lifestyle
Still others find that way too fast
They like to eat at the main street diner
Visit with friends while the dice is passed
    We all live in many homes, but we still live, all in one world
    It doesn't matter if its brick or mortar, we all share in the fate of the world.
Some people live on farms in the country
Some people live on city blocks
Some people live in public housing
Others live out of a cardboard box
Some people live in a house with grandma
Some people live in separate homes
Generations living out their callings
Others connected by the cellular phone (refrain)
    Some folks say there's a cause and effect
    Gonna use it up with all our might
    Rather find a way to share with another
    Seems sensible to me... and I think they're right
Some people live on a ranch in the Pampas
Some people live in a ten bedroom house
Some people live out on an iceberg
While other live in a hut in Laos
Some people always yearn to get bigger
Others long to downsize today
What links us in common is the fact that we're breathing
A global community is here to stay (refrain)

While the world around us gets smaller every day, we seem to find more ways to isolate ourselves. While we live differently in our various cultures, we are still a part of the human fabric and what we do has an effect on other people's lives.
